FIFTEENTH YEAR. VOL. XIV, NO. 25

CAPITAL NOTES.

Special Correspondence to the GLOBE-PUBLICAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1891.
George F. Edmunds, the first lawyer of the United States Senate, perhaps also first lawyer at the Supreme Court bar, and certainly one of the greatest of American Senators, retires at a moment when his fame is secure. His position is one among the most eminent men in public life that America has produced. The withdrawal of Mr. Edmunds at this time, although there have been some hints that he meditated such a step, was generally unexpected. That ill health should be one of the grounds of his retirement is painful intelligence.

Death was busy Tuesday. There fell before his sickle such men as Governor Fowler of North Carolina, ex-Congressman Erritt of Pennsylvania. But the death that will make the deepest popular impression is that of Phineas Taylor Barnum, greatest of showmen and one of the most enterprising of Americans. His list of notable achievements is the history of the modern circus and museum. The life of Barnum, as told by himself, is as striking a performance as any of his other feats. His genius and fame were universal. He was at home in the palace and the cottage and made himself solid with the savant as with the child. No matter if he were pausing off nurses of George Washington and woolly horses from the west on an unsuspecting public, or introducing Tom Thumb to Windsor's royalty or Jenny Lind to the sovereigns of America, he did it well and as no other man could have done. The one Barnum is dead. The world may never look upon his like again.

Yesterday afternoon at the Academy of Music President Harrison opened the congress of inventors and manufacturers of patented inventions. It was the first event in the celebration of the beginning of the second century of the American patent system. An audience worthy of the occasion had come together, and upon the platform were seated the distinguished vice presidents and others interested in this important department of human ingenuity. It was noticeable in glancing over the well filled hall, that a large proportion of the audience were white-haired. An address was made by the President followed by a program of great interest which included an address by the Commissioner of Patents and others. The second meeting was held later and presided over by Hon. John W. Noble, Secretary of the Interior. The address of Hon. John W. Daniel, of Virginia, on the "New South as an outgrowth of invention and the American patent law" was an interesting feature of the evening session. Later in the evening a reception to inventors, manufacturers and the ladies who accompanied them was given by Secretary Noble and Commissioner Mitchell and their wives in the rotunda of the Patent Office.

The argument on the Behring Sea case which was set for Monday, was postponed until the 20th. When it became evident that the Government would not be ready for trial by Monday Solicitor General Taft wrote to the clerk of the court asking that some other case be called ahead of the Behring Sea case. To this indefinite arrangement the attorneys for the British government would not consent, and a conference between the Chief Justice and all parties interested resulted in the selection of the 20th as the date for argument to be heard.

The annual proclamation of the President was issued Friday, calling attention to the revised statutes regarding the Behring Sea and seal fisheries, which direct the President to "warn all persons against entering such waters for the purpose of violating the provisions of the said section, and he shall also cause one or more vessels of the United States to diligently cruise said waters and arrest all persons and seize all vessels found to be or to have engaged in any violations of the laws of the United States therein." The proclamation concludes by declaring that all persons found to be engaged in any violation of the laws of the United States in said waters will be arrested and punished as provided, and that vessels so employed, their tackle, cargo, apparel, furniture and cargoes, will be seized and forfeited.

Some of the thinking democrats, who for the past several months have been congratulating themselves and the party upon the apparently bright prospects before them for 1892, are considerably annoyed by the chances of a division on the tariff question within their ranks. The only chances the Democrats may have of success in 1892 is regarded as depending upon the united opposition to protective tariff as represented by the McKinley law.

Senator Edmunds, after twenty-five years in the United States Senate, retires without having become a millionaire. This is good enough for an epitaph, and may the fates decree that many years are yet to pass before he is entitled to one.

HALE!

(To the soldiers of Kansas on the 25th anniversary of the establishment of the G. A. R. Posts.)

Here, boys, where the shadows are dark'ning
We must stop to a while to-night;
And bidding the comrades all to come,
Sit round the campfire's light;
We'll burn a few sticks from off Round Top,
And a stump from old Mission Ridge,
Some rails from the fences of Georgia,
Or a plank from the Andean bridge.

Take a look, boys, at the road we have come,
See the fires that have lighted the lines,
You die at the foot, bravely kindled
From the ashes of strife, dimly shines.
But, boys, they grow brighter and brighter,
With the four hundred and brighter.
We would, lingering, stand in the glow
That out of their embers is shed.

Each one of the old commanders
Has wearily sunk by the way,
And I'm not ashamed of the tears
That rise, unbidden, to-day.
We've journeyed the last of their graves,
For Sherman has reached "The Great Sea,"
And Johnson has laid "The lost cause"
In the arms of eternity.

But the march of the future, boys,
Leads over dark chasms of Time;
And battling the conqueror's age,
Our feet to the summit must climb.
Each fire on the way we have come
Carries the focus of comrades asleep,
And with tottering steps but a few
To our fiftieth campfire will creep.

Then forward into the future:
Let Time do his worst, do his best.
We'll rally again 'round the fires
That burn in the camp of the Blest.
With the dawn of the future, anon,
I believe that the Gray and the Blue
Side by side will march through the Gates
In the great—the final review.

JEAN WOODS KOONTZ,
April 6th '91, Garden City, Kansas.

Ingersoll on California.

In a recent magazine article, Mr. Ernest Ingersoll, the noted writer, says: "The climate of southern California in winter closely resembles that of Egypt. Its equality is constant and its climate is proverbial. The only complaint is that it is too nearly perfect. Residents bred in the Eastern States confess now and then that a rousing storm would give them a grateful sensation. But this sentiment meets with no approval from the man who has just fled from a superfluity of wetness and chilling gales. To him perpetual summer seems perpetual paradise, and to the invalid dreading the advance of disease the still and arid atmosphere is as the breath of life."
